How to pick and adjust a cane to the perfect fit for you.

Know the Basics

Round Handle or Standard Canes have a rounded crook handle.

Straight-handle Canes, or T-Handle canes, are used if the user's hand is weak.

Quad Canes are lightweight canes with 3 or 4 short legs. These legs give you the most support.

Small-Base Quad Canes have a smaller base, but give more support than a standard cane. Generally, a small-base quad cane fits on an average depth stair.

Large-Base Quad Canes provide a larger base and more support.

Checking the Fit

Similar to other mobility aids, the cane handle should be at the same level as the person's wrist when they are standing and their arm is at their side.

Measure the Height

Have the cane user wear their regular shoes.

Have them stand by a wall or chair for support.

Have them put the hand they will use the cane with by their side. Someone may need to support them depending on their balance.

Measure from the ground to the crease of their wrist. This should be the handle height of the cane.

Check your elbow bend. With the cane in your hand, your elbow should bend at a comfortable angle, about 15 degrees. You might bend your elbow slightly more if you're primarily using the cane for balance.

This is a starting point as some elderly may want the handle higher or lower based on personal preference (usually within 1").

If your cane is too long, you'll need to work harder to pick it up and move it. If your cane is too short, you might lean to one side—which can throw you off balance.

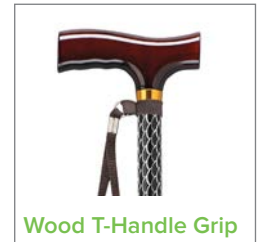

Selecting a Grip

Generally, choosing a grip is a matter of personal preference. Consider a foam grip or a grip that's shaped to fit your hand. If you have trouble grasping with your fingers—because of arthritis or other joint pains—you might prefer a larger grip.

Choosing the correct grip will relieve unnecessary stress on your joints and help prevent joint deformities. Numbness or pain in your hand or fingers might signal that your cane's grip isn't a good fit for your hand. Your physical therapist can help you choose the best grip for your particular situation.

The 4 Factors to Consider When Choosing the Perfect Rollator!

1

3 or 4 Wheels

Choosing a 3 or 4 wheeled rollator should be based on mobility needs as the size of wheels and the range of motion varies between a 3 and 4 wheeled rollator.

2

Size and Adjustability

Tall, Hemi, Standard Height and Bariatric Weight capacity rollators should be selected based on a user's height and weight requirements as well as the ease of adjusting the handlebars and leg height for personal customization.

3

Style and Comfort

Padded seats, backrests, convenient carry baskets and pouches come standard on most rollators. Choose the comfort features on a rollator that best suit your lifestyle.

4

Safety and Travel

The ease of folding capability and the weight of the rollator can play a major part in the life of the rollator user. An active user that does not have to rely on a caregiver may want a lightweight rollator that can be lifted easily for frequent use.
